

the same time, the fact that the two countries have similar political systems and similar political culture may have contributed to the similar results.

It is interesting to note that the results of the present study are similar to those of the study by Wong and Chan (2001) on the political participation of Hong Kong citizens.

There are several limitations of the present study. First, the sample size is small and the response rate is low.

Second, the data are self-reported and may be subject to common method variance.

Third, the study is cross-sectional and does not allow for causal inferences.

Fourth, the study is limited to the political participation of Hong Kong citizens.

Finally, the study is limited to the political participation of Hong Kong citizens.

Conclusion

The present study has shown that the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by a number of factors.

First, the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by their political beliefs.

Second, the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by their political resources.

Third, the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by their political motivation.

Fourth, the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by their political participation.

Finally, the political participation of Hong Kong citizens is influenced by their political participation.
