The 2000 U.S. Census Bureau's Survey of Income and Program Participation (SIPP) provides a detailed look at the economic well-being of Americans. The survey shows that the majority of households have a head of household who is employed full-time. However, there is a significant portion of the population that is either unemployed or working part-time. The SIPP also tracks the income of households, showing that the majority of households have an annual income between $10,000 and $20,000. This income level is significantly lower than the median household income reported in other surveys. The SIPP also provides information on the types of programs that households are receiving, such as food stamps and Medicaid. This information is useful for understanding the needs of low-income households and for developing policies to address these needs.

Performance-based standards are designed to measure what students can do with what they know. They focus on the skills and knowledge students need to succeed in the 21st century. Performance-based standards are designed to be clear, measurable, and achievable. They provide a clear path for students to follow and a way to measure their progress.
